I. PRE-CONFERENCE DOCUMENTS

Senator Connally told the Secretary that it was useless to discuss it because "It is the voting procedure and the President wants to sit down himself with Churchill and Stalin and see what we can get." In the Secretary's conversation Friday with Senator Connally both felt that regarding the Dumbarton Oaks proposals "nothing could be done now until the big meeting." Assuming that agreement would then be reached on voting and on membership, Mr. Stettinius was hopeful "we could have a United Nations Conference in the spring."

VARIOUS DEVELOPMENTS ABROAD

Soviet and Polish Problems. During the New Year weekend, Soviet Russia announced its recognition of the Lublin Committee, and there was widespread alarm that this meant another division among the Allies. However, the Secretary on Friday arranged with the President that he could "tell the press that we were consulted re Russia's recognition of the Lublin National Committee in Poland."

Meanwhile, discussions continued regarding handling of Soviet prisoners of the Germans captured by Allied armies.²

As for Germany, the Department's proposal³ had "been in the White House for several weeks." Chief problem was American control of Bremen and Bremerhaven in the British area to enable ingress and egress to and from the American zone. Also the French wanted equal participation with the Big Three in the occupation of Germany and a memorandum went to the President on Thursday⁴ recommending acceptance of the French proposals "subject to the approval of the military authorities."

War Crimes. In asking for a report on the status of the War Crimes Commission, the President told Secretary Stettinius that "The charges should include an indictment for waging aggressive and unprovoked warfare, in violation of the Kellogg pact."⁵ The Secretary in his reply⁶ listed the Commission's recommendations regarding courts for trying war criminals, and added that next Monday a meeting was scheduled in Judge Rosenman's office, "to come to some common understanding . . .⁷ and to submit a report to you."
