ABSTRACT

Aims: Pregnancies which are too many, too early and too frequent result in maternal/child morbidity and mortality. Delivery of effective family planning services has a direct impact on maternal/child wellbeing. Though awareness of modern contraceptive methods was high, the uptake rate remained low in Agbowo Ikosi, like in many rural communities of the country. This study was therefore conducted to determine the knowledge, prevalence and factors influencing the uptake of modern family planning among women of reproductive age in Agbowo community in Lagos state.

Study Design: A cross-sectional descriptive.
